This year's installment of the Society's Series on the Future of Publishing will feature a conversation with two of the country's most innovative directors of University publishing. Douglas Armato and Dean Smith have spearheaded and led initiatives in electronic publishing, intra-university publishing, and emergent formats of the academic book and journal. Tim Murray will lead them in a discussion of their highly regarded projects, funded by NEH and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, while also calling attention to the Society's sponsorship of alternative formats of publishing, from listservs to blogs.
